Learning & Teaching Methods

We believe that learning how to learn law is more meaningful. "Give a man a fish and you food him for a day. Teach him how to fish and you feed him for a life time." In keeping with this adage, we strongly believe that in the class rooms the students and teachers share a common knowledge gateway rather than the teacher alone transmitting knowledge to the students. We learn law both as it is and as it ought to be. Ought to be approach is supplemented with the methods of social sciences and humanities Case method and Socratic method of learning and teaching are the characteristic features of the class room discussion. Moot court competitions, client counseling skills, language and computer proficiency are the regular and vibrant features of NLIU. Constant and persistent endeavors are made to keep abreast with the current national and international teaching practices and to ensure that the curriculum meets the needs, challenges and opportunities of legal education in the twenty-first century.
